

Since you can stand and bear weight and have good ROM, your ankle, although tender and painful, is stable. However, it should be splinted for the remainder of the hike to your vehicle to prevent additional damage and your climbing partner should lighten your pack and carry all the climbing gear. If possible, use compression donuts under the splint to minimize swelling and promote rapid recovery.